It is a great summer camp which provides me with an extensive experience beyond academy. At the very beginning of the trip, I did not view the camp as a voluntary teaching camp and just wanted to pass my time in summer holiday. However, after visiting the families and children in taboo, I realize that there are some underprivileged in the world, who really need our care and support. For example, there are children being devoid of love from their parents and losing the chance to have education due to the financial burden. It is too early to say that I can keep this heart and join more voluntary work in the future but, anyway, it is a wonderful experience broadening my horizons.

Finally, it is very happy to make friend with other participants coming from different faculties. In spite of the various background we have, there are no communication barriers between us. It is pretty sure that I will recommend my friends to join other voluntary activities held by Mingde to enlarge their social circle and deliver their love to the needy.
