The trip to Dabao is really a meaningful and exciting experience. After four months' preparation, we successfully completed voluntary teaching which included water rocket, health education, sex education and game booth. We even held an evening gala to all the villagers there and successfully deliver important and helpful message such as the danger of smoking. The most impressive thing for me was when I did the family visit I found the villagers lived in rundown housing but they made their best effort to support their children to pursue education. In this process, I savoured the happiness of sharing knowledge, communicating with villagers and helping the unprivileged.
