All infrastructures I visited this time are helping youngsters receive education. Education is a path to help students establish a correct value, not to mention other technical knowledge. Not only can they make use of the technical knowledge to live in society, but they can also develop a value to give their helping hands to others with their abilities, just like what Project Mingde does.

Although I lived in an actually quite satisfactory conditions when I was in Guangxi, I sometimes felt uncomfortable. However, when I thought of how much the project can help children receive education, I felt that I was much more motivated. Moreover, I even thought of how much I can endure to achieve these goals, as the more the need of a place to develop infrastructure for education is, the poorer the living conditions I will encounter would be when I participate in the infrastructure construction projects there. This can be a question about which I can think more in the future.

To sum up, not only can the project help citizens in Rongshui, but it can also help me know more about my goal and explore how much I can do for the goal, let alone provide me with an opportunity of applying knowledge I learnt and observing how the knowledge is used on site. So, I hope that Project Mingde would continue to help the underprivileged citizens receive education, and help the students understand themselves more and realize the knowledge they learnt in places in desperate need of civilization.
