

Reflection on Experiential learning programme in Vietnam

LEE Chak Fai

This is not the first time I joined Project Mingde, but it is by far the most meaningful project for me. I found myself changed and improved a lot since I joined Project Mingde. Not only about the technical knowledge about civil engineering, but also about the society. I can understand more in the projects through site experiences and learn how to contribute to the society.

In general, I think the construction is quite successful because the toilet was finished before the deadline and we can actually use it. Though there were still many problems, the toilet still brings many conveniences to the students and teachers in the school. I have studied for two years in the university but this is the first time I can apply my knowledge on real engineering, I also learned a lot and gained many practical working experience in this internship. I once doubted whether I can work peacefully with my teammates. However, I gained lots of confidence in it because we cooperate with each other very well. We worked and learned together because we have to learn to report to our supervisor.

As an engineering student, this is the first time I think I can actually help developing the society, therefore I hope I can still do such meaningful works in my future career.
